In her opinion column "Laging Nililigtag ang Mahirap," Robredo said polls showed cheating as "nearly all" provinces and municipalities used "technological systems" and "device abuse" to falsify votes. "This is yet another proof that the administration is fostering intolerance and is looking to rig our elections," she wrote. The elections, which saw Robredo defeat her rival Francis Escudero by just 139,000 votes, were marred by numerous reports of cheating. Robredo lamented that most of the cheating reports came from just three provinces: Pangasinan, Cavite and Ilocos. The vice president said the three local governments were at the center of the "rigged election" because they "were averse" to the administration of Duterte, who has been accused by critics of backing extrajudicial killings. The government, through its chief election officer, earlier admitted that a few precincts in Ilocos Sur were "faked" but dismissed the possibility of cheating in other provinces. Responding to Robredo's statement, Presidential Spokesperson Salvador Panelo said the vice president could
