The effect of large size on endocrine-neural differentiation and growth in the murine brain. The murine brain is an excellent model for determining the endocrine influence on neural differentiation, particularly in view of the recent discovery of the concept of the tripartite nervous system: neural, endocrine and immune. In this model the action of the hypothalamic-pituitary-adrenal (HPA) axis on the developing brain is particularly potent. As the organization of the brain develops, it can be observed with the naked eye and also with the use of ocular micropositioning systems (OMPS). Thus, the use of the OMPS can be used to study the effects of perturbations to the brain, but information can also be gained from the appearance of the brain. A number of techniques are available for the analysis of brain anatomy and pathology and it has been suggested that endocrine influences on the developing brain can be detected by behavioural means.
