Parental interaction in psychotic-disordered children. The relationships between parental psychopathology, family functioning, and parental/child interaction were examined in 90 children with a diagnosis of a psychotic disorder (mainly schizophrenia, secondary psychoses, or schizoaffective illness) compared to a group of 26 children with an anxiety disorder, and two comparison groups. The main outcome measure was parental psychopathology, as measured by the Children's Depression Inventory (CDI), the Children's Depression Rating Scale (CDRS), the Abridged Hospital Anxiety and Depression Scale (HADS), and the Parent and Child Interview (PACI). The primary observations from this study were that the CDI could be used as a clinical tool to assess parent and child behavior and to identify parent-child 0cc13bf012
