Users who want to discover this program can learn more from the comments below.Chris Froome's attack on Tom Dumoulin at the Vuelta a España was a cunning ploy by the British rider to position himself for overall victory in the race. The Team Sky rider rode into Dumoulin on a counter-attack in stage 17 to close the gap to Dumoulin, who was leading the Tour of California and, as Froome was one of the riders chasing for the victory there, the goal was to claim his Tour de France title. "There was a part where I was pushing hard to win a stage there and a counter-attacked to try to gain time," Froome told Cyclingnews. "He didn't have the legs, and to show his true skill and determination to win a stage was something I didn't want to let him do and luckily we managed to close the gap. It was a good time, and it shows where we are in the race to close the gap to him. "The Vuelta is always a very demanding race. It's like a three-week GP in the UK, in terms of altitude. It is on the limit, it is a test. I'm looking forward to it." The Vuelta provides Froome with the chance to continue the form he showed in the Tour, while the World Championships in Richmond later this year will be the first in which he has an automatic spot on the British team. "At the moment, just to enjoy every day and not think about too much. Go out every day and try to enjoy the experience of racing, and know that if I have a good month, or a good year, it will allow me to choose what I want to do in the autumn. "I'm waiting to see what happens and if I can improve on anything. If I do something, great. If not, then it will give me another chance to go to the Worlds and be at the top of my game. I'm waiting to see." Froome is not necessarily in contention for the overall victory, which is dominated by Dumoulin, but is making his own cards to play. "It's too early to say anything. If I did something I would try to make the most out of it to win some time. I think that Tom is a stronger climber than me. If he makes a mistake, I can follow him. I have the b7e8fdf5c8
