This 2-channel receiver is a simple and direct way to add extra head and subwoofer outputs to your existing car stereo without having to make any internal electrical changes in your vehicle. With 2-channel receivers, it is now easy to add an optional subwoofer to your car audio system. The amplifier can easily be added into a high powered after market stereo system instead of using the original factory or aftermarket stereo head unit. In the event you have an original factory stereo and want to add a subwoofer to your set up you can easily remove your factory stereo head unit and use the 2-channel receiver to meet your needs. If you plan on using your car stereo to play CD or DVD players, you can use the 2-channel receiver to feed the extra head and subwoofer outputs to your car stereo. The 2-channel receiver is easy to install and install in only minutes. Simply plug the female plug into the male plug on your factory head unit or factory stereo head unit and then slide the unit into the dash and secure it using the included retaining tab. The included retaining tab will hold the unit firmly in place until you release the tab and remove the unit from the factory head unit. Features For use with Head Stereo Contains no electrical components Will fit all factory head units Installs quickly & easily without any additional tools Will not damage any factory head unit Supports 115v Phantom Power - available in 50k, 100k & 150k Supports the following headphone/headphone types: 3.5mm, 4.4mm, 6.3mm, 7mm & 9mm Provides 2-channels Supports stereo in, sub in & out (with a high pass filter) Supports dual full

The age of the organic matter in Greenland ice cores is controlled by the emission of tracers of atmospheric deposition and degradation as well as by deglaciation processes. The ice-core derived age of a compound is related to its observed degradation rate and to the preservation of the molecule. The main source of the organic compounds studied has been the atmosphere, but degradation processes also occur in the deeper ice. Here we present an investigation of the in situ behavior of nitrogen- and oxygen-degraded compounds by measuring the first derivatives of the concentration profiles as well as some of the compounds. We find evidence for (1) non-uniform distributions of degradation products within the ice, (2) differential preservation of the different types of compounds and (3) possible links between the amount of heavy nitrogen compounds and the total amount of C in the ice.A validation study for the new version of the Frost & Sullivan: Customer Experience Index - Global Database is available at www.
