Add me on: - steam forum: Design Patterns: How to enable DRY programming when doing something very frequently and repetitive When I am doing something repetitive (e.g. parsing a configuration file which has a lot of key/value pairs in it) I tend to write a function for the task. If this task repeats often (i.e. is not already contained in an object), this leads to code duplication. The problem is that in this context you are not allowed to use functions which are not defined in object oriented programming. I know one solution is to use a construct like: `function getValue(obj,key) { if (obj === null) { return null; } else { return obj[key]; } }` which makes your code less repetitive but not quite nice (one implementation for each case without a DRY approach). I also know that this common scenario can be handled by a factory object (e.g. `Object.create()` in js) but I am looking for a more elegant solution. Does anyone have any ideas how to handle this problem (so it does not seem like code duplication) and improve the DRY concept in a Javascript environment? A: Basically, instead of repeating code you could take advantage of a `buff6bb2d33`
