What's new in Stories Of Bethem: Full Moon:

The Church celebrates its Father's Day today and this year, we're focused on a new-look sniper rifle that can be built into a fully functioning AR with everything that makes ARs versatile, including the ROMA Rail. The ROMA Rail is our take on building an FAL clone. For those of you in need of a refresher, the FAL-15 Inglis was a fairly robust rifle during World War II and one of the most common rifles of the era. The firearm was named after the Austrian company F.A.L. who manufactured and marketed the rifle. F.A.L. became Colt with the merger of them and the US government in 1945, following the war. Today, Inglis rifles are good collector's items and these guns are even sought-after by hunters. The ROMA Rail, while not likely to have been widely adopted during the 40's-70's, provides a good template for building a compact semi-auto firearm capable of generating 60 meters of effective range from open ground. You can watch the build below or check out our step-by-step build guide. To build the rifle, we turned to the Church family. The ROMA Rail was built by Church's new chief engineer: Tim Kordan. Tim (the lead mechanic of Church's last game, PAYDAY) provided the ROMA Rail, the parts, hands-on instruction and oversight, while returning artist Scott 'TraumaticO' Morris provided digital design and speedy modeling. We took the ROMA Rail, redid it for PAYDAY 2 with new grips, redesigned some parts and added a way for players to travel that's a real representation of the "time is muscle" gunplay we're known for. The ROMA Rail is a 60-degree forward-mounted folding top-mounted stock AR-15 type. The stock itself folds flat against the gun for ease of storage. The ROMA Rail uses the same components as the AR-type grips we released for SPIDER-MAN: BYWEEKEND 2, except that this one has a number of unique features. The ROMA Rail can be disassembled into three main sections: the grip, the receiver tube (the length of the weapon's barrel) and the butt stock. The grip, where all the action is, is the most unique element:
