It is unavoidable as we grow older. We will inevitably encounter sorrows, disappointments, struggles and so on. The Buddha taught us to deal with our grief by this way of practice. The Buddha taught us to teach ourselves to feel sadness and then to deal with it in a skillful way. He showed that what we do when we encounter sorrow and pain is more important than where we encounter it. He showed us the ways we can face sadness, to transform it into the joy of life. As we do the practice of sadāna, we begin to practice with a meaningful intention. If we do not do this practice with a meaningful intention, it is difficult to transform our negative emotions into the joy of life. What are the factors, as we practice sadāna, that bring forth joy in our life? The first is learning how to let go. We need to learn how to let go of negative emotions because if we do not let go, those emotions will create disturbances in our lives. If we do not learn how to let go, the mind will be very turbulent and unstable. When the mind is turbulent, our ability to perceive things from a correct perspective is not good. We will be always distracted and immersed in our own emotions and sufferings. When we study and practice sadāna, we learn how to let go of negative emotions. We learn how to control our own anger and anxiety by learning how to observe our mind. Because we learn to observe our mind, we can see our emotions clearly. When we can see them clearly, we will feel the joy in our life. We will be able to change them into the joy of life. The second factor is the development of virtue

.Hiddink: Mourinho 'lost' title in 'weakest points' Pep Guardiola insists Jose Mourinho will never face the 'ultimate revenge' of being sacked by Chelsea, but another manager insists Mourinho has felt the "ultimate revenge" after a stunning Premier League title defeat at the hands of the Blues. Sunday's 2-0 loss at Stamford Bridge is the third time Mourinho has suffered the ultimate revenge, as his Manchester United side were famously sacked in 2004 following their 1-0 league defeat at Chelsea's hands. Guardiola still believes "he'll never get what he wants", although he admitted there were occasions Mourinho did not have the right answer to most questions. Chelsea and Manchester City have the best head-to-head record in Premier League history, with five wins apiece. Mourinho's title victory in 2003, and three league wins over City, is his only Premier League triumph. But Guardiola has no such concerns about Mourinho's record against his former club, and insisted "he'll never get
