The success of the K2 test is, of course, directly correlated with the reliability of the K2 interface, which is a key part of the test. If the K2 interface cannot reliably deliver the voltage to the test equipment, then there is no reason to bother with the test at all. So, it is crucial that the interface be 100% stable, and the test software must never drop the data-acquisition stream, freeze, or cause any other interruption in the stream of values being recorded. I've got a form with several input fields. The field looks like this: `input type="text" id="field-name" name="field-name" placeholder="Please enter your field name" class="form-control" />` When I type on the input field, I want to be able to "enter" an empty value. When I press enter, the input value is empty and a message appears like "You've left a blank value" The problem is, this doesn't work. The value is still not empty when the input is empty. The validation fails and the input value becomes a valid value of "true". How can I fix this? A: As @Emilio suggested, the form element should be Here is a example Using the event property as event.which, the return statement should look like `function onEnter(e,el) { if (e.which == 13) { // do something el.value = ""; } }` You don't have to do that, but it's another way. This one is more reliable because it doesn't cause a validation error. Notice that you have to click twice to get the space instead of the Enter key. This is because `type="text"` by default. To make it work, you need to change it to `type="text"`
