Database reports in JavaScript format are used in a number of International trade-related public and private organizations and markets. A JSON database is a simple, light-weight, cross platform database for JavaScript. It can also be used as a data-serialization format. The advantage of JSON database over XML database is that it is easy to parse, and also contains many features of a regular database. JSON database can be easily accessed from JavaScript code without using any proxy server or any external file. It uses the JavaScript object literal notation to describe the database. All the user interfaces can be operated with the help of JavaScript, and HTML form can also be developed which can be used to post the data. This version has a simple customer-facing form and the data is being pushed into the database server. The development of this application has been done on Microsoft Visual Studio 2017. The core of the MSX Software engineering system consists of five.Q: How can I insert comments without the formatting problems in nodejs and expressjs? I have a static page that prints out a bunch of data. These data are displayed as tables, with header and footer, and I would like to insert comments between the rows. I just use plain text for the comments, and it works. But when I insert a backslash for some indentation it will escape the line break in the table, and look like this: C:\Users\Burnt> node > node index.js # world - size:24, description:"This is the world This is the world \ This is the world This is the world This is the world \ How can I display the comments with the same indentation as the table? A: Add a non-breaking space (U+00A0) inside the HTML or use as string: or ... blablabla Have a look at the Node.js REPL, like the following example code: var data = ['a','b','c','d','e','f']; var html = "" + data.map(function(a) { return " + a + " }).join("") + " ; console.log(html); will yield a b c d
