I'm trying to learn Japanese, and my Japanese teacher sent me a message which I don't understand. □□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□□100□□□□□□□□□□□ Any ideas what the difference between □□ and □□ is? A: □□ seems to be the exact translation of the English word name. In the modern Japanese society, people usually prefer to use □□ in casual situations. □□, on the other hand, seems to be the exact translation of the English surname. □□□□□□ seems to mean "registering a person's name" or "registering a person's business name". This invention relates to a free-cutting structure, in which a cutting blade can be freely shifted in its axial direction and in its circumferential direction, when cutting an object. A cutlery, which comprises a hard inner core and a hard outer shell covered on one surface of the inner core, is well known in the art. When cutting an object with such a conventional cutlery, it
