Treatment of old anterior glenoid loosened type of lesions of the glenoid: an arthroscopic biopsy study. The causes of recurrent shoulder dislocation were analyzed in patients who had undergone anterior surgery before the age of 10 years and in patients who had recurrent shoulder dislocations despite repeated surgery. Fourteen patients (11 men and 3 women; mean age, 29.8 years; range, 18 to 53 years) were selected from the pool of 100 patients who had undergone anterior surgery at our institution. repair, a limited glenoidplasty, or a total capitellodynia. Arthroscopic biopsy was performed in 10 of them. As a control, the tissues of 26 patients who had had acute traumatic dislocations or were presented with traumatic anterior instability were biopsied at the time of arthroscopic management. The average follow-up was 30.8 months (range, 12 to 80 months). In patients with anterior instability, the mean age of patients who had a labral tear was 9.1 years, and patients with a labral tear had a mean interval of 4.2 months between dislocation and repair. In patients with recurrent dislocation, the mean age of those who had recurrent dislocations was 23.3 years, and patients with recurrent dislocations had a mean interval of 18.8 months between two operations. All labral tears were more than 10 years old. Proliferative and fibroblastic lesions were identified in all the biopsies (24 of 26). Chronic inflammation was present in 4 specimens (16.7%) and was located primarily in the deep layer of the anterior and middle glenoid. Chronic inflammation was correlated with the age of the lesion, i.e., older lesions have a greater incidence of chronic inflammation. In all cases, there was no evidence of infection
