Docosahexaenoic acid (DHA) is an omega-3 fatty acid widely distributed in the human body, and its positive effects on cancer prevention have been well established. However, the biological impact of DHA on the radiosensitivity of non-small cell lung cancer (NSCLC) is still unclear. In the current study, we examined the role of DHA on the radiosensitivity of NSCLC. Radiation-induced apoptosis, cell cycle distribution, as well as the expression of miR-34a and p53 were examined. Our results demonstrated that DHA increased the apoptotic and radiosensitive effects of X-ray irradiation in A549 and H1299 cells. Mechanistically, DHA inhibited miR-34a expression in a concentration-dependent manner and reduced the interaction between miR-34a and p53. In addition, p53 was increased with DHA treatment in X-ray irradiated NSCLC cells. The upregulated expression of miR-34a inhibited the induction of apoptosis and cell cycle arrest. By contrast, the downregulation of miR-34a by antimir-34a enhanced the radiosensitivity of cells. Taken together, the results indicated that DHA enhanced the radiosensitivity of NSCLC cells via miR-34a-mediated p53 activation.1.
