We investigated the effect of a fractal form of the distribution of reaction times on the apparent fractal dimension of the reaction time distribution. The data were obtained from a computer simulation in which random numbers were alternately displayed in the center of a CRT and a 6 x 6 array of buttons was used for the response. The apparent fractal dimensions of the reaction time distributions were calculated from both cumulative distribution and density-frequency representations. We assumed that the central stimuli were always randomly displayed, whereas the buttons were fixed for the random reaction time in the CRT task. When the apparent dimension in the cumulative distribution and the density-frequency plots were similar, the apparent dimension became smaller as the ratio of the number of buttons to the number of central stimuli increased. Furthermore, we found that the apparent dimension was related to the coefficient of variation of the reaction times. Thus, the present study suggested that the appearance of a fractal form of the reaction time distribution has a close relationship with the fractal dimension and the fractal structure of the spatial distribution of responses.1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a method of manufacturing a semiconductor device, more particularly to a method of forming a contact hole having a small contact resistance value. 2. Description of the Related Art In a semiconductor device, a contact hole is formed in an insulating film formed on a semiconductor substrate and is filled with a conductive material to form a contact of a conductive layer and a semiconductor layer. In order to realize a high performance of a semiconductor device, it is necessary to reduce the contact resistance value. However, as the diameter of a contact hole decreases, the aspect ratio of the hole increases. As a result, the sputtering rate decreases. In such cases, the surface of the contact hole is not completely covered with the conductive layer. Therefore, the

I have a problem when using flexbox for a menu. See this codepen: The problem is that the link is now positioned at the top left of the box and is no longer to the right of the.home-item box. I know that the CSS in this example is messy and I am looking for a way to make it clean but that is not the point of this question. I tried to add float:left to the.home-item box, but then it is no longer laid out horizontally but vertically. A: The problem is that flexbox is replacing the wrapping from the float. Instead you need to apply the flexbox styling
