The present invention relates to an electrical connector, and particularly to an electrical connector having a housing with a relatively fixed accommodating portion and a relatively movable accommodating portion, which is actuated by an actuating arm of the connector, for receiving a mating connector. In high speed communication systems, semiconductor chips are typically mounted on circuit boards, which are then connected to conductors using plated-through hole connections. Each of the circuit boards has a plurality of electrical connectors located on one of the surface. For example, the circuit board may have a row of electrical connectors along the edge of the board. In the prior art, the electrical connectors are connected to the circuit board using automated equipment. U.S. Pat. No. 5,600,339 to Komiya et al., entitled "Circuit board connector", discloses a housing of an electrical connector constructed as a single unit for accommodating a mating connector. The housing includes a fixed portion and a flexible portion which is bendable to receive the mating connector. The fixed and flexible portions are attached to each other by means of latch fittings. U.S. Pat.
