etc. Basically, regardless of what you do with the available layers, you should be able to use a hotkey to decide which one you want to see in the foreground. Q: Is there an alternative to JQuery Ajax Post for ASP.Net Web API 2? I have been trying to code a general HTTP POST method in ASP.Net MVC4 using Web API 2 for 1.5 weeks and have been getting nowhere! There is no success response from using Ajax, I believe that this is because I am using a model which has some complex properties and is creating a complex object. Because of this I have tried using HttpPostAttribute in a method that has the same signature as the standard WebApi controller in the hopes that this would cover me but the ModelState.IsValid always returns false. I then tried reverting back to using $.ajax but then the content-type is no longer applied correctly in my POST and it is sending a GET request. It would appear that I have misunderstood how the HttpPostAttribute works and how it should be used, it seems that it is not the correct thing to use when using complex objects in HTTP POST requests. If I am using HttpPostAttribute, should I just return a simple bool or should I just return an object which just has a bool value? Am I going about this the wrong way? A: So it would appear that the HttpPostAttribute is meant to be used for simple types and should not be used if you're using a complex type of object in a POST method. The solution is to create an action method with a parametrized route like this: [HttpPost] [Route("{id}")] public IHttpActionResult MyMethod([FromRoute] int id) { // Do something } Just make sure you haven't got any default values in your route definition such as this: [HttpPost] [Route("{id:int}")] public IHttpActionResult MyMethod([FromRoute] int id) { // Do something } If I was using the HttpPostAttribute, I would be expecting a simple model type in my POST method and since a complex type of model is being used this is not the case. # # This file is a part of the NsCDE 6d1f23a050
