Shortly before 9:30 a.m. today, police reported to the scene of a stabbing that occurred late Wednesday night. According to police, a woman was walking through the Park District of Ottawa Community Housing at The Bridleway area when she was approached by three men and stabbed. The woman was treated for non-life threatening injuries. Police say that the attack may be a random incident and investigation is ongoing. There have been no arrests and no description of the attackers has been released. Evaluation of the effect of different topical anesthetics on the healing of full-thickness skin wounds in rabbits. The effects of 2% procaine spray, 1% tetracaine spray, and 0.1% and 0.5% formulations of both local anesthetics were tested on the healing of full-thickness skin wounds in rabbits. A dorsal circular excision was made, and the wound edges were closed with interrupted sutures. The treatment was started immediately postoperatively. The healing of the wound was evaluated by analyzing the following parameters: epithelialization, inflammation, amount of collagen, and the presence of cellular infiltrate and edema. Animals treated with tetracaine and those treated with procaine showed less inflammation and edema and faster epithelialization. Tetracaine was more effective in reducing edema and inflammation and accelerated the epithelialization of the wounds. Moreover, the dosage of tetracaine was more effective than the dosage of procaine. The amount of collagen was not different between groups. The scoring system used for this study showed a significant difference between anesthetics only in the fourth day. The accompanying drawings are for illustrative purposes only and are not intended to limit the scope of the invention in any way. A number of techniques have been developed over the past many years for imaging tissue. The advent of digital signal processing has been a significant driver in the development of these methods and makes it possible to transmit or store an image (e.g., in the form of a matrix of pixels) in memory as opposed to printing a hard copy. One way of ascertaining the location of the various physiological and anatomical structures

The present invention relates to a heavy duty wheel arbor that can be used in the wheel forming process. A wheel of an automotive vehicle is typically formed by pressing a steel strip into a wheel body after the wheel body has been formed by multiple steps of stamping. In the manufacturing process of the wheel body, multiple wheel arbors are used to form the wheel bodies. Each wheel arbor has a plurality of arcuate sections that make up a circumferential portion of the wheel body. The wheel arbors are guided into the wheel body by a plurality of guide rolls. In the initial steps of forming a wheel body, there is a possibility that a wheel arbor may be introduced into the wheel body improperly, or that the wheel arbor may become damaged. If the wheel arbor is damaged or introduced improperly, the manufacturing process must be halted. Since the manufacturing process of a wheel body typically involves several steps, the manufacturing process is halted for a lengthy period of time. Moreover, the damaged wheel body cannot be used and must be discarded. The present invention provides a heavy duty wheel arbor that can be used in the wheel forming process. The wheel arbor includes a plurality of arcuate portions of different radii. The arcuate portions have the same length and are arranged consecutively. Thus, each of the arcuate portions makes up an arcuate portion of the circumferential portion of the wheel body. An inner diameter of the wheel arbor is smaller than the outer diameter of the wheel body. The wheel arbor is forced into the wheel body by a forming punch. Thus, the wheel arbor is not damaged and does not become misaligned when forced into the wheel body. Preferably, the different radii arcuate portions are respectively formed of different materials. When the different materials are pressed into 6d1f23a050
